The Vanna White Of Montclair State

Thursday night. 11:54 pm. I was standing at my usual spot, just to the left of the pillar next to the bar in the Rathskeller. Just as I went to signal for my favorite bartender, I spotted her. Flanked by someone who was built like Arnold Schwarzenegger with a haircut and sunglasses to match and a taller version of Michael J. Fox she stood out like a beacon. The Vanna White of Montclair State.

"Help you?" said Joe the bartender, breaking my trance. "Uh, Yeah, give me another Molson." I said, in a voice much to low for him to hear me over the too loud songs blasting over the speakers. He must have read my lips because he popped open another one and put it down in front of me. I didn't notice if he took my money or not. Staring at Vanna took president over every other concern. Once I thought I saw her look at me, but no, it couldn't be. Besides, Arnold and Michael J. had her pretty occupied. Her nonchalant air gave me a glimmer of hope, however.

Now was the time to devise a plan of action. How would I approach her? Was it possible for a guy like me to score under these conditions? Pickings have become slim, what with herpes and aids and all. Used to be you only went blind. Now, either you had incurable cold sores or end up dying and Howard Stern telling about a thousand jokes about you. Stuff like upside down cake being named after you. Wait, wait, now my mind was wandering. Why am I thinking about aids? Because straight guys get it too, I told myself. Besides, Vanna over there dosen't know you from Adam. I just wasted ten minutes and haven't thought of a plan yet. I had to work fast. First, get rid of Arnold and Michael J. If I was lucky and my timing was right, maybe they would disqualify each other and I could move in for the kill. Yeah. Right. Maybe elephants can fly. This is the eighties, I told myself. If I want something I have to go out and get it myself. I have to make my own breaks. Damit, I have to go for it.

Wait, wait! New developments. She is going to dance with Michael J.. This could work to my advantage. Arnold got tired of flexing and left with some of his other bicep buddies. Now with him out of the way I can possibly manuver my way over there. That is, provided she dosen't leave with Michael J. And provided she returns to the same spot. Oh, he has to return. She left her wine cooler there. I worked my way over to where she previously stood. I ordered another Molson and waiter for them to finish their dance. Now, how do I break the ice? "What's your sign?" Get serious. "you know. I've always liked girls with this blood type?" Too obscure, I know, how about if I ask her if I can buy a vowel? That's it. "Excuse me, can I buy a vowel?" What a great line. If this works, I'll make history, I sipped my brew and reeked of confidence. Oh, oh. Here they come. Oh my gosh, Michael J. is leaving. He must have been denied. Its just me and vou now. Vanna.

Up close, she didn't look as much like Vanna White. She did glance at me when she returned to the bar. I nodded at her and she smiled back at me. "Excuse me, Jim," I said as I stood on the little ledge and leaned over the bar. "Can I have another Molson when you get the chance. By the way, did anyone ever tell you that you look like Pat Sajak?"

"Pickings Have Become Slim, What With Herpes And Aids And All. Used To Be You Only Went Blind."

Working Out

Studying

Teachers were always my most favorite people. They seemed caring, concerned about students, interested in our development . . . traits I wanted to make my own. I guess the thing that's best about teaching is the opportunity to present an idea to students, an idea that is new to them, watch them grapple with this new idea, and watch them try to make use of it, make sense of it, and hopefully grow by it, so that when they come out it's not so much book knowledge they know, but new ways of thinking about things, so they can entertain more possibilities.

One of the nice things about teaching at Montclair is that many of the students have fairly traditional world views and knowing that I am saying things that are outrageous to them delights me. I want to confront what they believe to be absolutely true and make them think about why they're so convinced it's true.

I ended up at Montclair totally by chance . . . I put my name in the book of prospective applicants one year at an Eastern Psychological Association meeting, and about a week later I got a call from this place called Montclair State College asking if I wanted to come for an interview, and I said sure. I'd never heard of the college. I never knew it exsisted. I had hardly ever been in New Jersey before then.

- Professor Irwin Badin Psychology Well, let me see . . . I got started in teaching in the late 1960's. I wanted to be in an environment where I could continue to learn things, and I liked being a student myself. In the sixties I admired my own professors . . teaching seemed positive because what went on in universities really had an impact on the world and that seemed exciting. I think the university environment has changed since then. The student leadership today is active about different things than students were in the sixties. They were more concerned about social and political issues than students of today.

One of the biggest differences I've seen is that students are more goal oriented today than students in the sixties were. I see students being more involved today in nitty-gritty practical issues such as tuition and college funding.

Students involved in student government at Montclair seem to take it very seriously. I think sometimes in a way that makes it difficult for them to balance their academic committments . . . student government seems to evelop some students.

-Professor William Berlin Political Science

I really like teaching. It's a fun kind of thing to do. One rewarding aspect is when students have an "Ah-ha" experience . . . I like their expressions, the bright eyes, that sort of thing. The longer I teach, I'm increasingly comfortable with it, and in some ways I see teaching as almost like performing-you can be on or off.

When I first started teaching I once did a week's lecture in a fifty minute class and had twenty minutes left. But I've improved since then. I guess I've learned to be comfortable in front of a group of people. I wasn't as a student. I never talked in class because I was afraid to say anything.

I found out about Montclair accidently . . . The chairperson who hired me talked with my thesis advisor at a conference in Helsinki, Finland. He called me from Helsinki to ask if I'd come for an interview . . . so I decided to try out the North for a couple of years.

-Professor Catherine Norris Home Economics I find that people in urban areas seldom look at the sky, and don't know the constellations . . . so I like to take students outside to visualize what it's like. I like to get students out of their seats, taking part in a simulation of the real sky. My favorite participatory demonstration shows the true scale of the solar system and just how empty space is. On a nice day I take the astronomy class outside in front of Richardson Hall and position students holding model planets relative to a student holding an orange, which is the sun. On this scale the earth is agrain of sand 22 feet away and Pluto is another grain of sand 880 feet away, nearly to College Hall.

I also try to get students to read the newspapers and keep up with what's happening. A recent discovery is that there is a huge black hole way out there, halfway to the edge of the universe. There's no immediate danger . . . it's about 8 billion light years away.

Once a group of ten students and I drove up to Nova Scotia to see a solar eclipse. We camped out for the weekend, and saw the eclipse. . . It was great fun!

- Professor Mary Lou West Physics/Geoscience

I got started in teaching by accident. I had no real aspirations to attend college, but the opportunity prevailed itself upon me... I accepted and found out I could excel. The students I come in contact with are encouraging to a person who wants to teach. They're openminded, assertive, have a willingness to learn, and want to take part in their education. I remember most students by name, and I'm very fond of the relationships I've established with students. Many come back and tell me of their successes.

Students of today are different from students of the past in that they seem to be less aware about things going on on campus. At present I fail to see any real unified cause among the students. Perhaps they have causes, but they're not spoken at present. It's a phenenomon I don't completely understand myself. They do seem to have silent thoughts about helping the world.

Montclair State College when I first came here was a very small school . . . It has grown immensely since then. It had places like the TUB, Temporary Union Building. It seemed that there was nothing more permanent than a temporary building.

- Professor Richard Grey Counseling/Human Services

When I started teaching I decided instantly it was the greatest thing in the world. After all I'm basically a ham, and there's nothing like a captive audience. Apparently students appreciate that type of attitude. I began to develop a very good relationship with my students the first couple of years. Back then I wouldn't quit teaching for a million bucks. Today I'm in need of a bit of variety, though. I've been teaching for fifteen years now and the closest thing to a break I've had is a couple of summers ago I did not teach.

I don't think the quality of our students has changed-actually it has improved. What has changed is that around the country now there's the idea that colleges should be run as businesses, that the colleges are factories and students are the products.

Most of the graduates from our department do stay in contact. Three years may go by and all of a sudden someone may show up, come walking in the door, and I'll say, I know you from someplace . . . because he's changed a lot since then, you know, but I haven't changed that much!

-Professor Christopher Stasheff Broadcasting

Sweeps over us At the most unlikely of moments The hand that reaches out When we have fallen Under the burdens of our own humanity The shoulder that comforts us When we cry Over unexpected failings The eyes that see for us When ours are clouded over With the mists of our own ego The heart that warms us When other fires Have grown cold For friendship is a kind of love Subtle and persuading Persevering and constant And it is found Anywhere we care to look Yet that is why we so seldom find it For rarely do we open our eyes

To see the beauty in those who surround us.

"Living on campus has its good points and bad points. It's a good way to meet people. Sometimes strange things can happen, though . . . "

"One year, living in Freeman Hall, we returned from winter break to find water drops hanging from the ceiling, like it was raining inside the room. Even when it was sunny outside it was raining. We kept calling maintenance but they never came. Finally one of my friends brought in heaters to dry up our room."

"Another semester I lived in the 2D wing in Blanton. One night there was a wing party on the fifth floor, a huge bash, very noisy. Suddenly all the RA's were called over the loudspeakers. Someone had flushed a pizza down a toilet. It had overflowed into the dorm rooms, into the hall, ruining stereos, carpets, shoes. The stench was awful . . . it took them two weeks to clean everything up. It was really funny."

"I was on a waiting list to get housing for about a year. Finally my name came up and I was assigned to a Clove Road apartment with three roommates I did not know."

"One of my roommates and I were opposites in quite a number of ways-he ate health food, I ate junk food. He was neat, and I was a little, ah, unorganized. I smoked, and he couldn't stand it."

"He was always trying to get me to stop smoking. Once, after another of our weekly Thursday night trips to the Rat we were walking back to Clove, both of us pretty drunk, and he decided he was going to crush my box of cigarettes, so he pushed me down the hill. So I crawled back up and managed to push him down the hill . . . eventually we wrestled on the ground, and he kept trying to crush the cigarettes in my pocket, but they were in a crush proof box."

"Getting involved at MSC was one of the best things I did in college. As I stood at the podium giving my farewell speech as CLUB President at the CLUB banquet, tears filled my eyes as I wondered where four years had gone."

"One thing that stands out in my mind is the Home-coming Parade. CLUB members worked night and day on our float for the parade. So there we were in the parade when all of a sudden the flat truck our float was on stops on Upper Mountain Ave. It broke down. All of the work that went into that float . . . and we couldn't even finish the parade. We were crushed."

"It didn't stop a bunch of us from pushing the float the rest of the way, though. Not only did we finish the parade, we even won an honorable mention trophy."

"I began my college experience with an immense sense of awe at these hallowed halls; this soon passed. Classes in the beginning were challenging and exciting.

. . at the end I found them boring, frustrating, and annoying. I joined that group the SGA for a while, and the more that I learned the more they became in my eyes a group of obnoxious children playing the part of propagandists for a better democracy."

"What has the SGA done in four years? Spend our money, of course. And money, every time I go the business office, I cringe, don't we all?"

"So what has college done for me? That's a hard one ... well I guess I'd have to say the people. I did meet my future wife at Montclair, I guess that's the best thing that happened to me besides the friends I've made. Montclair is not the pencil marked desks, paint chipped walls, and dusty halls. Montclair is, and its soul is, the people."

The Beginning

So this is it. The book is finished, and now I have some space for a postscript. I must say I've enjoyed my four years on the year-book. But there are some questions in my mind I've thought about. Such as . . .

Was being Editor-In-Chief- which, like the other staff memberships- and unlike some other notable student offices- is a no-pay, non-academic credit, solely volunteer position- worth putting up with all the bureaucracy, red tape, lack of cooperation, and other assorted nonsense that this college is notorious for? Was it worth dealing with an incompetent, Gestapo-like Student Government that meddles in affairs it knows absolutely nothing about? Was it worth listening to all the stupid questions from a collection of incredibly apathetic students? Most of you sheep don't even know how this book was paid for. At this point as far as I'm concerned most of you people don't deserve to have any kind of yearbook at all.

Anyway, if it wasn't worth all the controversy I never would have spent so much time in the Student Center Annex. (By the way, the Annex is a building similar in design to an oversize, buried coffin. Student organizations are confined here while administrators currently lounge in the more spacious and lofty fourth floor of the Student Center. Your student fee money at work!)

And that's it. I'm not offering any insights about this book; it will stand on its own. This is not the end. For MSC yearbooks, this is the beginning . . .
